

The New York Times

Student Journalism Institute 2014 Application Form

The Institute will be held at Dillard University in New Orleans from May 18 to June 1. To attend, you must be a student at a historically black college or university OR a student member of the National Association of Black Journalists and you must supply ALL of the following:

1. A resume and this application form completely filled in.
2. An attached essay of no more than 500 words written by you on why you want to be a journalist.
3. A letter of recommendation from a faculty member of your institution or from an editor of a news organization at which you have been employed or been an intern. This letter MUST be sent directly by the individual making the recommendation, not attached to this application form.
4. Six clips from a student or other publication or Web site of stories you have written, or stories you have edited (with headlines you have written) or three video documentaries or six photographs or graphics or layouts or examples of coding such as an interactive graphic. (Videos, photographs and graphics may be from an unpublished portfolio and you may send a URL for a Web site where they appear, or a CD or DVD.)

The application AND the letter of recommendation must be postmarked no later than Nov. 1, 2013.

All material should be sent to:
